

V&H CONSTRUCTION: Building the Future

In February of 1995, Robert Holbrook and Donald Valentine embarked on a journey that has become V&H Construction. Robert is a 1976 graduate of Vermont Technical College with a degree in Civil Engineering. Donald is a thirty-one-year veteran of all phases of on-site operations including supervision of staff, sub-contractors, and safety. Together, they provide their clients with an unmatched wealth of knowledge that can make your commercial project or your home build go smoothly, timely, and, more importantly, properly—the first time. With experience in building specialized manufacturing plants, mid-rise office buildings, health care facilities, fire and rescue squad centers, sport complexes and high-end custom homes, V&H Construction brings back quality and trust to American business.

In addition to their impressive skill-sets and personal commitment, both Robert and Donald bring an unwavering set of values which are rare in today's world. They believe in honesty and quality in each and every project they are involved in, and they will settle for nothing less. Many contractors today are so concerned with getting the job, they tend to over promise and under deliver. V&H, however, will under promise and over deliver. They know their reputation is at stake with every build, but it is their integrity that keeps them focused—they do not want to let themselves down. Their own harshest critics, Holbrook and Valentine hold themselves to a standard that is, for many, unattainable. Every brick, every container of mortar, every plank of wood is treated as though it were going into their own homes. With every passing year, proposed projects are subjected to higher scrutiny and tougher regulations by governing agencies. These oversights are important, but it is refreshing to hear someone say “ultimately, it is our responsibility to get the job done on time and within budget.” This statement speaks volumes about the character of V&H Construction, and the ideals to which they adhere. How many times do we hear the “blame game?” How many times have we heard horror stories about contractors? There is a stark contrast between the “norm” and V&H

Construction. It is undeniable.

For those who may be under the impression that V&H is all about commercial work, think again. There is a 2,600 square foot home being built about 3.5 miles north of Bolton Landing that bears the V&H stamp. This home is timber framed and boasts structure insulated paneling. This means that the panels are insulated to provide a much higher rate of energy efficiency. A testament to the level of detail Robert and Donald bring to each job.

In the construction field, turnover is high. People come and people go. Not so at V&H Construction—they are proud to say that their staff, for the most part, has been with them for over ten years. Why is this important to a potential client? It's crucial because the veterans of V&H Construction have been around and assimilated into the culture that Robert and Donald have created. The people on-site, the people drawing the plans, and the leadership of the entire company share the same values. The outcome is unprecedented quality and craftsmanship for any client, on any job, at any time. If you are looking for someone to build you a home, a business or any type of facility, give V&H the opportunity to add you to their growing list of very satisfied clients. Clients like Garvey Volkswagen-Kia, Sportline, Dr. Gina Canale, the Lake George Fire Department and many, many more. V&H Construction is located at 195 Fort Edward Rd, in Fort Edward NY. The telephone contact is 518-746-1520, and Web site is www.vandh.net. Isn't it time you bid for quality?
