Attorney at Law

Success Magazine: Erin, when did you begin practicing law? Where did you work prior to starting your own firm?

Erin Vestal: I was admitted to the bar in January, 2006 and began working right away for a local real estate law firm and title insurance company. In 2008, I opened Vestal Law, PLLC thanks in most part to the love and support from my parents and husband.

SM: What type of law do you practice?

EV: My practice is primarily focused on real estate/real property law, title insurance and residential mortgages. I knew within the first three months of being a lawyer that real estate was the area I wanted to be most involved in. It's one of the more cooperative areas of law.

SM: What makes Vestal Law stand out among other area firms?

EV: Vestal Law is a full-service real estate law firm that can assist in all phases of a real estate transaction, including finding the right property and the financing of it. Over the past five years I have developed strong working relationships with real estate companies, mortgage companies and mortgage lenders that have allowed me to be able to offer full-service package deals to many of my clients with the convenience of dealing with one office for all matters. There can be many different players in one single real estate transaction which can sometimes lead to a lot of unnecessary work and major communication breakdowns. Having all necessary services available in one location can really simplify the closing process, saving clients time and money which is crucial in this market.

SM: Your husband is also a practicing attorney. Do you work together?

EV: My husband, Ronald A. D'Alessandro, is the owner of an intellectual property law firm, Keohane & D'Alessandro. Intellectual property law is highly specialized and technical and so while we do share office space, we do not work together. We often joke, however, that between the two of us, we have all your property needs covered, real and intellectual.

SM: An attorney's schedule is often quite arduous. How do you find balance in your life?

EV: Believe it or not, being a business owner has actually provided me with more balance in life than working as an associate attorney in a big law firm ever could. While there are certainly days when I am so busy I can barely breathe, having the ability to control my own schedule and knowing I can use my time as I see fit has given me the perfect opportunity to find the balance I need to be successful in life, both personally and professionally.
