

Homecrest Kitchens

Jamie & John Bergami

Success Magazine: What does success mean to you?

Jamie Bergami: Success, to us, is when our customers leave our showroom satisfied.

SM: What is unique about Homecrest Kitchens?

Jamie: We are a family owned business that has been servicing customers for almost forty years.

SM: What can a client expect from their experience at Homecrest Kitchens?

John Bergami: All our clients can expect exceptional customer service each time they enter our showroom.

SM: Your father started this company and the two of you have taken over the operation. What are some challenges that come with being a family owned and run business?

Jamie: For me, the biggest challenge has been the long hours. Taking over the business comes with a great deal of responsibility and time.

SM: When did you start working in the industry? What are your individual roles within the business?

Jamie: I was sweeping the warehouse at age six...now I design kitchens with builders and help run the company.

John: At age nine, I started helping in the warehouse and now I run the day-to-day operations, and also help run the company.

SM: What lines do you carry?

Jamie: We are proud to carry Candlelight, Showplace, and Homecrest Cabinetry.

SM: What services do you offer?

John: Total kitchen design. A visit to our showroom is a must for every customer to see the many design options available in cabinetry and countertops.

SM: What is the most important business lesson you have learned from your father?

Jamie: Don't ever be afraid to work hard, and the rewards will come later.

John: For me the greatest lesson has been to be responsible.

SM: What is your hope for the future of Homecrest Kitchens? Are there plans for a third generation to take over the family business?

Jamie: Hopefully my two sons and daughter will continue to follow in the family business. They are in school now, and are already helping out whenever they have the chance.

John: My hope is to continue proudly in the tradition our father started.
